FEET OF FINES FOR ESSEX.

PREFACE.

THE nature of a Fine was explained by Mr. R. E. G Kirk in our first volume (1899); and since then various features of it have been studied in greater detail by Mr. G. J. Turner in Huntingdonshire Fines (1913), and by Canon C. W. Foster in the second volume of Lincolnshire Fines (1920). These may be referred to for general knowledge of the subject, and it seems unnecessary to repeat the information here. There are, however, some points in the present volume which are worthy of notice.

The writ of covenant begins to supersede others; the writ of warranty of charter, which had been the more popular, is now less used and appears for the last time here in 1326 (p. 225) and not again for Essex before the reign of Henry VII. The payment of a sore sparrowhawk as consideration does not occur after 1314 (p. 159).

The subject matter of the Fine has become simpler and almost stereotyped in a small number of forms; there is little elaboration of detail except in the case of settlements, generally indicated by the absence of payment of consideration, which occur in increasing proportion. Manors are named more often, and when not named can frequently be identified as such.

The sums of money mentioned as consideration are invariably exact numbers of pounds, marks or shillings, and evidently fictitious. The acreages, however, and the number of messuages, etc., appear to be still fairly accurate; although round numbers may be suspected as having been given to make certain of covering smaller amounts. Thus, the distribution of meadow agrees well with the known situation of streams, moor and heath are rare. and the scarcity of woodland in Dengey hundred is confirmed. Alder occurs only in a belt east of Bardfield, Stebbing and Witham to the coast and Stour.

During the period covered by this volume we have the commencement of another large series, that of the Notes of Fines, which were the revised drafts from which the Feet and counterparts were engrossed. They appear to have been made at earlier dates, but not then thought worth preservation. The series is imperfect; but it sometimes happens that a defective Foot can be supplemented by the Note, and there are a few Notes for which the corresponding Feet are missing. A facsimile (actual size) of a Note is shown in the frontispiece, and its form can be compared with that of the Foot and counterparts of another Fine shown in the frontispiece to the first volume.

There is also a third large series, that of the Concords of Fines, which are a still earlier stage in the preparation of the Fine; but it is not continuous before the reign of Elizabeth. and not many earlier Concords are preserved. The later Concords are chiefly interesting as containing signatures of the parties.

In the 56 completed years of Henry III. the total number of Fines relating to Essex is 1,763, giving a yearly average of 31 5. Apart from Notes, the total is 929 and the yearly average 27·3 for the 34 completed years of Edward I., and the total 1,117 and the yearly average 58 8 for the 19 completed years of Edward II.

In the following reigns the yearly average falls until it reaches a minimum in the time of the Yorkist kings. It rises again under the Tudors, slowly at first and then rapidly at the time of the Reformation.

The Court of Common Pleas was at York in the terms

Trin. 26—Mich. 32 Edward I.
Mich. and Hil. 13 Edward II.
Trin. 15—Mich. 17 Edward II.

but otherwise all Fines here calendared were levied at Westminster.

In a few cases the Feet appear to have been wrongly marked, and to refer to another county. These are :—

FEET OF FINES FOR ESSEX.

 Each year of the reign of Edward I. comprised portions of two Michaelmas terms. Where an asterisk is placed after "Mich." it denotes that the Fine was levied in the latter part of Michaelmas Term, i.e., after 20th November, the Accession-day of Edward I. When no asterisk is used, the first portion of the term, at the end of the regnal year, is intended. The principal days in this Term are set out in Vol. I., p. 55 (note).
